What Leads You

to use the imitations of Pearline? Some trifling prize, cheap prices, or because the grocer or peddler says "same as" or "as good as?" What do these amount to, if your things are ruined in the washing? They may be. And you can't see the damage that a dangerous washing compound is doing, until the damage is done; with the poorest, that takes some time. With these imitations that nobody knows about, you have to take your own risk. Be on the safe side, and use only the original—Pearline. Millions of women can tell about that. Ask some of them, and satisfy yourself. Get their experience.

Send it Back — Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, be honest—send it back. 382 JAMES PYLE, New York.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16. The poll of the House has been practically completed by canvassers in the interest of the anti-silver faction, and it is said to show a majority of 27 in favor of an unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause as provided in the Wilson bill. TORONTO, Aug. 16. The Empire, the leading government newspaper, says editorially in regard to the decision in the Behring Sea arbitration: "Canada strove for principles that are of international moment and concern for the rights that it is the interest of all nations to uphold, and Canada has won."

The Mail (independent) says: "In the negotiations Canada is subjected to unlooked for restrictions. She is restricted, for example, to the north Pacific, with which the arbitrators had nothing to do, but on the whole it may be said the Americans have lost their cause."

MONTREAL, Aug. 16. The Herald says: The decision of the Behring Sea committee in favor of Great Britain's contentions will cause no surprise, even in the United States. It was evident that the Americans themselves regarded their position as untenable.

The London Press.

LONDON, Aug. 16. Commenting on the Behring Sea decision the Daily Chronicle says: We feel sentiments of profound gratitude at the full settlement of a difficulty which once threatened to involve the rival interest of three powers. The arbitration is a triumph of reason and humanity over which the civilized world should rejoice. Continuing it says: America, from the outset, had not a leg to stand upon. Part of its case rested on forgeries, and it stood out for rights which would infringe of the common rights of mankind. Its counsel made the best possible defence of its preposterous claims, but all their combined eloquence and learning and ingenuity had only the effect that the arbitrators decided against it on every point.

The Morning Post says: The American citizens on the whole will rejoice that one more source of controversy between us is removed.

THE SILVER DEBATE.

The Nation's Choice at the Parting of the Roads.

Fallacies and Dangers of the Free Coinage Movement.

The following speech of Congressman Morse, of Massachusetts, is good reading at this time:

Mr. Speaker: There comes down to us from mythological times a story that Hercules on his journey once came to a point where there were two roads. He did not know which to take. From one there emerged a maiden in gaudy attire, beckoning him her way. Hercules said to her: "What is thy name?" She replied, "My name is Pleasure, but my enemies call me Vice," and from the other road there emerged another maiden in modest attire, beckoning him her way; and Hercules asked of her, "What is thy name?" She replied, "My name is Virtue. The road to which I invite you is difficult, but the end is joy and peace." Mr. Speaker, we have come to two roads. Sound finance beckons us on to prosperity and national honor; "free silver" and a debased currency beckons us on to humiliation, ruin, dishonor and disgrace.

Mr. Speaker—I am most heartily in favor of the repeal of the purchasing clause of the so-called Sherman silver bill, but the remainder of that act, which declares that the government shall maintain the metals in use at a parity, is wise statesmanship and should stand.

So much of the President's message as relates to gold, silver and currency has my most hearty and unqualified approval. So much of his message is good, sound Republican doctrine and, I believe, is wise and far reaching statesmanship, and meets the unqualified approval of a large majority of the people of this country without regard to party affiliations.

One of the misfortunes of the present situation is that the so-called silver States have a representation in the other end of this building entirely disproportionate to their wealth, population or commercial importance.

The great States of New York, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, have an aggregate population of nearly twenty million, and these great empire States have not as much voice in the Senate of the United States as the little silver States with an aggregate population of about two million, and who have sixteen votes in the Senate, and whose representatives in this body, at least, appear to see everything from the mouth of the silver mine.

Why, the State of Nevada, with less than one-quarter of the population of my district, has two Senators and one Representative to vote to Mexicanize our currency and put us on a silver basis.

So facts I have been able to gather from the speeches that have been made here, all the propositions before us upon which we are to vote, all the speakers are monometallists and lead to a single standard, with this difference, that the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. Bland, and his followers advocate a policy that would most assuredly place the country upon a silver basis and make gold merchandise and drive the six or seven hundred millions of gold now in the country out of circulation as a basis of currency or as money.

I regard the proposition made upon this floor that this country unaided and alone can fix the value of silver and its ratio to gold and compel other nations to adopt that ratio as the veriest folly.

If this proposition is correct, and that by an act of United States Congress we can fix the ratio for the world, why load down the people with a silver dollar so large as sixteen to one. Why not make it half or quarter that size?

This proposition is so absurd that it answers itself. Some of the speeches that I have listened to upon this floor or this subject make me think of the boy whose father was a clergyman, who was asked by another boy "if his father ever preached any of his old sermons?" O, yes, he said he did, but he does not holler in the same place. The arguments during this debate are the same old arguments which have been often refuted by abler tongues than mine. The only difference is that the speaker don't holler in the same place.

Suppose that these gentlemen can succeed in passing a free coinage measure, and suppose the result which I have predicted should come to pass, i. e., that the country should bid out on a silver basis, why what then? Talk about the tariff increasing the price of foreign goods, why the tariff won't be bowhere. Why, tea, sugar, coffee, silk and 10,000 things, necessities as well as luxuries, which we do not and cannot produce in this country, would have to be paid for in gold or its equivalent in our depreciated silver currency, and would immediately increase in value to American money 25, 30 or 40 per cent. The rich would not be the only or principal sufferers.

No class of our people will suffer so much from the depreciated currency as the poor and working people, the purchasing power of whose money would be immediately largely reduced.

But not only that, the workingman's little savings, the trust funds of widows and orphans, invested in a railroad security, a bond or a mortgage, or deposited in a savings bank, would be reduced in value by one fell swoop the difference between a 37-cent silver dollar, if the ratio is fixed at 16 to 1, at present value of silver, and a hundred-cent silver dollar.

Wherever the great nations of the world, England, France, Germany, Austria and Russia, agree upon a ratio for gold and silver, then free coinage of silver will be wise and safe, and our currency, either gold or silver, will be the money of the great civilized nations of the earth.

It was believed by the advocates of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act that it would have the effect to greatly enhance the price of silver, and place it perhaps on a parity with gold.

How signally and mournfully this prediction has failed is patent to the humblest citizen. The act had the effect to stimulate silver mining, new appliances have been invented like the steam drill, new and more powerful explosives have been used, and the direct effect has been to greatly cheapen, instead of enhancing the price of silver, and it is now proposed to jump out of the frying pan into the fire and pass a free silver bill, by which we give notice to all the world to bring all their old silver junk, pots, kettles and spoons, as well as bullion, to the United States mints and put fifty-seven cents worth into a patent slot machine and have it come out stamped a dollar of one hundred cents.

The wheat plan that ever lived, for all this operation when we said under divine inspiration, "Artful balance is an abomination to the Lord, but a just weight is his delight."

I look upon this proposition to debase and degrade our currency as an effort very largely on the part of the debtor class to repudiate a portion of the debt under the cover and sanction of the Government of the United States.

Existing loans and indebtedness were created in the currency and money of the world, which the President describes in his message as gold worth one hundred cents on the dollar.

And to pay them in a depreciated currency, worth 50 or 60 cents on the dollar, was forbidden on Mount Sinai, when the Almighty said, amidst thunderings and lightnings, and commanded Moses to write on the tables of stone "Thou shalt not steal."

There is another important factor in the matter of this silver problem that must not be lost sight of, and that is the cost of alluminum is being greatly cheapened. It is manufactured from clay, and it is believed from those qualified to judge that it may before long be produced for ten cents per pound. It is a beautiful white metal, susceptible to a very high polish, and I believe is destined to take the place of silver in the arts, in many ways and in the thousand uses to which silver is now employed, and if this be so, it cannot fail to further greatly depreciate the price of silver, and exaggerate the evils of the silver currency.

Mr. Speaker, while I most heartily agree with the financial utterances of the President in his recent message to this house, I cannot agree with him that the appalling situation alluded to in the repealing clause of that act. It is believed that the personal property in this country has shrunk one and a half billion dollars since his election last November.

It is idle and preposterous to attribute this shrinkage solely and entirely to the purchase of four and one-half million ounces of silver per month.

The Sherman act was passed July 14, 1890, and the Government purchases of silver amounted, in round numbers, to about $110,000,000 worth since the act took effect, and had the Government lost the entire amount, instead of the depreciation, it could in no way explain the terrible shrinkage in values to which I have referred, or the slow pace that is upon the country now.

This has been largely produced by an entirely different cause. The country has discounted the threats of the Democratic platform, which declares all protection as unconstitutional, and proposes to place the country upon a free trade basis with a tariff for revenue only. And the country has been getting ready for lower prices, promised by Democratic speakers in the last campaign, the merchant has bought from hand to mouth, the manufacturer declines to make goods in the face of a falling market, and the uncertainty hanging over values and the tariff has had the effect that every wise business man forsaw when the result of the election was known last November, i. e., to paralyze business and to throw thousands of workingmen out of work; to destroy our home market and principal market for agricultural products by driving thousands of men who were formerly consumers into the business of last resort—agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, it doesn't take statesmanship to see that if the promises of the Democratic platform are to be performed, and if we are going to buy our goods in England or in other European markets, and if all protection is to be wiped out, then we can and will drive home manufactured goods to this country and give employment to American workingmen.

Under similar conditions in 1847, when we had a tariff for revenue and bought all our goods in England, and had no business in this country but agriculture, in the face of an abundant harvest one inhabitant in thirteen and one-half in New York State was a pauper, and soup houses were opened in every ward in New York city to feed the starving poor, and, unless all signs fail, that thing will be repeated in all the large cities in the Union next winter.

God only knows how far the hand on the dial of progress was turned backward at the election last November. The country was at that time prosperous and enjoying unbounded prosperity under the wise and far-reaching statesmanship of the McKinley tariff bill.

Never in the history of the world would an average day's pay of a workingman buy as much of the necessities of life as now. Money was abundant for all purposes. All this is now changed. Instead of expansion we have contraction, instead of confidence we have distrust, instead of progress in business we have stagnation, our factories are closing, and thousands of workingmen are being turned into the street. The home market for agricultural products is destroyed by the very threat of a tariff for revenue only.

Confident I am if the election were to take place to-morrow, in the light of our present experience the Republicans would sweep every Northern State.

There is no school like the school of experience, and if the people of this generation will learn, by the other, they must learn what past generations have learned, that a tariff for revenue or free trade means paralysis and death to every material interest of the country.

Mr. Speaker—In 1847, the period I have mentioned, Horace Greely wrote in the New York Tribune, as follows: "Why is it that the skilled laboring men, willing to work, are going to the soup houses to get enough to sustain themselves and family, when we are paying nearly millions in gold to buy the goods that we could produce with our own labor?" And, Mr. Speaker, when the free trade promises of the Democratic platform are performed, that will mean three hundred millions of gold sent to Europe to buy goods we could and should make ourselves.

Mr. Speaker—A great Virginia statesman said in his immortal argument in favor of independence, in the Virginia House of the Assembly, in 1775, "Why stand we here idle?" The situation of the country is appalling, the eyes of the country are upon us as never before. The President has wisely pointed out the financial danger which threatens us, and the majority of this House should proceed at once to define and declare it economic and financial and tariff policy, that the uncertainty may be removed, and that the great business interests of the country may know the worse, and the conditions which will confront them, as regards finances and the tariff. In the words of Patrick Henry "Why stand we here idle?"

Now one word in regard to the relations of the two parties to this financial question. The preposterous claim is made in Massachusetts, by the "Boston Herald" and other Democratic papers and speakers that the Democratic party is in favor of the gold standard, and the Republican party is the party of free coinage of silver.

And say they: "Did not we send a stripling from Massachusetts to the Fifty-second Congress to fight this Goliath?" Any man who would make such a claim on this floor would be laughed to scorn.

One of the Democratic speakers on yesterday called attention to the fact that the Democratic conventions in every State in the Union, save Massachusetts, who had made any expression, had declared for free coinage of silver.

And I shall be happily disappointed if when the votes are counted it is not found that the President can command the vote of 20 per cent. of his party to repeal the purchasing clause of the Sherman act.

But did not Republicans pass the Sherman act? Yes, and did not the Democrats vote against it? Yes, but for an entirely different reason than the Democrats in my section would have the country believe.

The Sherman act, or compromise, for it was a compromise to prevent the passage of a free coinage bill by the nearly solid vote of the Democratic party, aided by a few Republicans from the silver States.

Long the Sherman act was denounced on this floor, in my hearing, by the fifty-first Congress, by the gentleman from Missouri and others, as a gold bug measure, hostile to silver.

Could the Republican conferees have gotten into the bill the provision making the purchasing clause inoperative after two or three years, which we were prevented from doing by the solid opposition of the Democratic party, all would have been well.

Why, Mr. Speaker, the moment you say "Honest Money," "Board of Trade," "Chamber of Commerce," "National Bank," on this floor, that moment the Democratic party on this floor cries out "Shylock," "Gold bug," "Wall Street," as though the great business of this country could be done without these institutions.

Memorial Day.

The following beautiful essay was written and most effectively read by Miss Jessie M. Nult, at the Boynton High School in Eastport on "Grand Army Day," and elicited much attention and compliment, as the production of a scholar of but fifteen or sixteen years of age:

MEMORIAL DAY.

All over this glorious Union to-morrow, North and South, East and West, will loving hands and loyal hearts join in strewing flowers o'er the graves of those who died that our nation might live.

A quarter of a century ago that distinguished soldier and statesman, Gen. Logan, first appointed a day for decorating the graves of the heroic dead, with the wish that the beautiful idea be kept up from year to year. It has been kept alive and each year sees a brighter blaze of interest, reaching into the hearts of young and old. Two years after Gen. Logan's order, the National Encampment of G. A. R. passed a resolution that the 30th of May be observed annually as a Memorial Day, when services should be held in churches or halls as well as decorating the final resting places of the Union soldiers and sailors.

Not only do the members of the G. A. R. zealously and faithfully perform this lovely and solemn rite, but all who have lost their loved ones on this day pay a tender tribute of flowers to their memory, and all the schools throughout the nation should take part in the Memorial exercises that those who have grown up since the war may not forget the long struggle in order to make this a free country, in fact, and keep the flag we honor pure.

At Lincoln's call for troops, Maine responded with numbers of her best; from the cities and towns, from the desk and the plough, from counters and schools, went forth hundreds of brave men and youths, marching, many of them, to their graves, some to victory.

From this very school in '61 went the principal, C. H. Smith, who fought through the entire war and at the close had reached the rank of Major General. Soon after Mr. Smith's departure, Mr. Emery who received a Colonel's commission, went also, and his early death was caused by serious wounds received on the battle field.

We are honored, to-day, by the presence of some of those whose services at the front, entitle them to wear the veteran's badge, and among them is one whose name is familiar, not only throughout his native State, but to all who are conversant with national legislation in recent years.

We are proud to welcome to our school the Congressman from this district, whose public and private life illustrates to well by precept and example the principles of purity, patriotism, temperance and intelligence, and whose eloquent appeals in behalf of the soldiers have so often been heard in the halls of Congress.

How little can this generation judge of that time of war with all its excitement and suffering! After the troops left Eastport, daily despatches coming from the front, telling of the engagements, with lists of the dead and wounded, were read from the telegraph office to crowds gathered in front, waiting, yet dreading to hear, lest one, from the family circle or dear friend had fallen, for there were few families but had some relative at the front.

But how few away from the scene of victory or defeat could imagine the actual battle ground. In the fury of action, nerved with excitement and courage, to do or die, the brave men felt neither fear nor pain, but after the battle when the dead and dying were left behind, then were seen all the terrible horrors of the field.

To quote from the graphic pen of another of Maine's distinguished veterans, Gen. Chamberlain: "The splendid but unavailing charge was over, and at last night fell. But out of that silence from the battle's crash and roar, rose new sounds more appalling still, rose or fell, you knew not which, or whether from earth or air; a strange ventriloquism, of which you could not locate the source; a sighing moan, a wail so far, so deep and wide, as if a thousand aloes were flowing into a key note, weird, unearthly, terrible to hear and bear, yet startling in its nearness; the writhing concord broken by cries for help, pierced by shrieks of agony, some begging for a drop of water, some calling on God for pity, some for friendly hands to finish what the enemy had so horribly begun; some with delirious dreamy voices, murmuring loved names—and underneath all the deep, hoarse bass note from closed lips, too hopeless or heroic to articulate their agony."

There seems little glory in such scenes as these and yet, the Union must and shall be preserved and loyal men gave freely of their lives for this purpose. Then let us honor the memory of those who never again can cheer the starry flag, or fire one more shot for their country. Remember that,

"Peer not the sudden laughter of the May
In beauty dad to deep
Upon its hand; but never more for them
Our harvest gone, the rose upon the stem
Earth, or the fair sky shines to bless
The living eyes with pure love's tenderness.
No song bird at the morn
Greets them with glad cry of a day new born,
No fragrant breath
Harvest of cold lips again to love and life,
Breaking sweet slumbers with its sweet release
They may not wake again."

Comrade David Forrest read a poem of his own composition, introducing Hon. C. A. Boutelle as orator of the evening. The verses were very complimentary and well written, and were received with much favor. We copy a few stirring stanzas:

Raise up our flag till stars and stripes
Again float proudly on wave,
And all concord from North to South
The banner of the brave.
With emblems of the heroes who
Have carried it aloft,
Through shot and shell, through Southern hell,
Till victory was installed.

The orator's lay will ever have
And deservedly forget me not,
For he has carried to all hearts
The thistle of the Scot.
The great immortal shamrock,
Dear emblem of Erin's living,
And Cyprian Old Glory at
In days of Auld Lang Syne.

A sprig of great Saint David,
With Britain's rose enhanced,
A sprig or sine of the Fourth
And Lincoln's of France,
With others emblematic of
The men who proved their love
For their bright Constellation
By their roll call from above.
Revere's and honored be their names
Beneath fame's effect soft
With devotion's examples
We resign their souls to God.
Their rest silent by the angels sung
Before the throne of grace.
They with us bravely paved the way
To everlasting peace.

Democrats Unmasked.

Ever since the depression in business that followed close upon the heels of the Democratic return to power in all branches of the government, the papers of that party have sought early and late to impress upon the public mind the idea that the trouble was due solely to the effects of the Sherman law, which has been so bitterly assailed as Republican legislation. In their desire for partisan capital two important facts have been ignored so far as those papers are concerned. First, that the Sherman law was a compromise, or as the President stated in his message "a truce," the aim of which was to prevent the more radical legislation advocated by the practically solid Democratic column in Congress; and second, that the existing depression in general business is the result of the fact that the Democrats are in a position to carry out the protection smashing programme set forth in the Chicago platform.

But let us look at the consistency of the Democrats in attributing all business ills to the effects of the Sherman law, coupled with denunciation of the Republicans for its adoption. What is it to-day that prevents the unconditional repeal of the silver purchasing clause of said act? Simply Democratic opposition led by men who base their position on the record of the Democratic party on the currency question. But the solution of this problem, devolved on the Republican members of Congress, the silver purchasing clause of the existing law would have been unconditionally repealed before this time. With a Congress Democratic in both branches now in session, it is no longer possible to keep up their pretence of Republican responsibility. That this fact has at last impressed itself on one Democratic paper is shown by the following quotation from the Washington correspondent of the New York Herald:

> It would be idle to deny that the outlook for the unconditional repeal of the silver purchasing clause in the Sherman act is black so far as the Senate is concerned.
> President Cleveland has been tricked and trapped by men of this [illegible] party, and the Democracy must be held responsible for the present uncertainty and confusion that prevails in the national legislature.
>
> The truth must come out and the country might as well bear it now as at any other time. When the President called Congress together and stake it the reputation of his Administration on a blunt, patriotic demand for a stoppage of the purchasing of silver, he relied upon the promises of men who have betrayed him in the Senate.
>
> He would not have convened Congress in midsummer were it not for the assurances given to him that the extraordinary session would promptly come to the rescue and save the country from the perils of a depreciating currency that was gradually making the United States the laughing stock of the great commercial nations.
>
> Knowing beyond any possibility of error that the House would support him, and believing that the Senate would rise above the level of machine politics on such a question, Mr. Cleveland supposed that the purchase clause of the Sherman act would be promptly stricken out and that Great Britain would be forced to propose a bi-metallic treaty in order to protect the immense silver currency of India.
>
> But as soon as the Senate met and the President's message was read Senator Gorman, feeling as the Democratic leader, moved for an adjournment and proposed a party caucus. Compromise was his idea. The caucus appointed a harmonizing committee, with Senator Gorman as chairman, and ever since that time the free silver men have gained in strength, Mr. Gorman will vote for sound money, but he does not go any further. Being a leader, he does not lead!
>
> The Republican Senators have been ready to help him from the very start, but he will make no alliance. His unsteerful hand is not drawing the doubtful Senators to the support of the President and the country, but is apparently forcing the sound money Senators toward a compromise. A dishonored and dishonorable system may be thrust upon the people, but Senator Gorman will be able to pose as the peacemaker—the savior of his party. The President and the Secretary of the Treasury may be repudiated and spat upon, but Senator Gorman can point to the fact that he prevented the Democratic Senators from being divided, even though he accomplished it at the sacrifice of the financial and commercial interests of the whole country.
>
> To sum up the day in Congress it may be said that sound money is gaining in the House, but losing in the Senate. And this situation will not change unless the Democratic party in all parts of the country speaks at once to Senator Gorman and the Senators who stand in the shadow with him.
> It will be seen that this correspondent claims that the House will vote for the repeal. This may be true, but the fact is that so far the free silver men have forced their programme of delay, the result being that the country is now treated to liberal doses of oratory instead of action. The Democrats have the overwhelming majority in the House, and in view of the arraignment of the Sherman law as Republican legislation the people would like to know the meaning of all this unnecessary delay. In every calculation the practically solid vote of the Republicans is counted in favor of the unconditional repeal of the silver purchasing act. Nothing stands in the way but the Democratic free silver vote, and yet that party has the impudence to charge the Republicans with the responsibility for the present condition of affairs.

To Increase the Bank Currency.

The Philadelphia Press says: The national banks have been petitioners for more than a decade past for the privilege of taking out currency to the par value of their United States bonds. The security of the United States is perfect. It can lose nothing by allowing this slight increase in bank circulation. The banks will gain and the country will gain, and the only thing that has prevented the change to the law long ago has been Democratic hostility in our national banking system.

It is gratifying to see evidence of a change of heart on the part of Democratic public men in this regard. Last week the Ohio Democratic State Convention made one of the planks of its platform a declaration in favor of allowing national banks to issue currency to the par of their bonds. Yesterday Senator Voorhees, never heretofore reckoned among the friends of national banks, introduced a bill to carry out this declaration of the Ohio Democratic platform. Secretary Carlisle, who gained his fiscal reputation by embarrassing proposed national bank legislation by unfriendly amendments, now gives the influence of his official station to secure the passage of the bill.

It is a good bill and ought to pass. Since most of the Republicans have all along favored it this new Democratic support ought to insure its prompt adoption. It will strengthen the National banks, prolong the period of their existence and add at once $19,000,000 to the volume of currency. It is this last consideration, doubtless, which recommends the bill to Democratic favor, but whatever the motives of its new supporters the measure in question is in the line of safe and sure legislation and ought to become a law.

No Progress.

The Washington correspondent of the Boston Journal under the date of the 15th, writes as follows: The Steering Committee of the Democratic Senators, of which Mr. Gorman is chairman, has made no progress whatever toward an agreement on a coinage proposition. It is understood to be their policy not to present any definite bill until after the House shall have acted upon the measure now before it. Many Senators are of the opinion that very little would be gained in the Senate by presenting a coinage bill in the Senate at this time and that it would be wiser, and, ultimately, more expeditious to have before that body a definite measure upon which the House should have acted before formally taking up a bill in the Senate.

Politics, unfortunately for the country, has taken possession of the silver question on the Democratic side. The Democratic Senators thus far seem to be bound hand and foot by Mr. Gorman, who is the Chairman of the Caucus Steering Committee, which seems to have taken the place of the regular appointed Finance Committee, and Mr. Bill of New York. These gentlemen are politicians. They are not business men. It remains to be seen whether they are patriots.

But the indications seems to be, and the fears of their friends are, that they would take greater delight in defeating Mr. Cleveland in an issue which he has so sharply made, than they would in passing a bill for the unconditional repeal of the silver purchase clause. Mr. Gorman is known to be casting about for some measure which will satisfy the free silver men, and which at the same time can be passed in both houses and command the approval of the President. He has not yet found such a measure. It is not certain that he can.

The friends of the repeal are confident that the unconditional bill can still pass the Senate, but they are not able to point to an accurate roster of the votes to confirm their view. Senator Palmer, of Illinois, said to-day that he thought that an unconditional repeal bill would pass by a small majority if it could be speedily brought to a vote. Senator Call on also thought that the unconditional repeal might pass. Senator Washburn said that he believed that there were 50 votes in the Senate for unconditional repeal.

There seems to be a possibility, also, that the tariff question will be brought up for consideration in the Senate. Two resolutions are already pending which will afford Senators a text for debate upon that question. The one introduced by Senator Hill of New York would seem to indicate that he is anxious to have his party run away from the declarations of the Democratic National platform on the subject of the tariff. His resolution declares it to be the intention of the Senate that the business of the extra session shall be limited to the consideration of the silver question. He has been home and seen the manufacturers and has discovered that the unrest is largely occasioned by uncertainty as to the tariff.

But the Republican Senators do not think that this uncertainty can be removed by resorting to an untried policy and refusing to inform the public what the policy of the Democratic party is to be. On the contrary, they think that more would be accomplished if the Democrats would declare just what their policy is to be in order that the manufacturers may shape their business accordingly.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Senator Gallinger Points Out Danger of Tariff Tinkering

House Devotes Another Day to Silver Question.

Senate

WASHINGTON, Aug 16. The morning hour after the introduction of bills was largely occupied by a discussion as to the overloading of government buildings in Washington with public books and documents, Mr West, of Missouri, proposing a remedy by the passage of a bill appropriating $300 000 for a building to be known as the Hall of Records The bill was passed Notice was given by Mr Voorhees that he would not ask action to-day on the bill to allow National banks to increase their circulation to the vaule of the bonds deposited by them but he would to morrow

Mr. Cockrell, Democrat, of Missouri, offered an amendment to this bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the holders of 5 per cent bonds who may present them for redemption, their face value, with accrued interest, in United States legal tender notes.

Mr Sherman, Republican, said that the moment treasury notes were paid out on these bonds which are not now due and the interest on which is no burden to the government, the notes would be presented to the government and payment in coin demanded, that it would be an unbusiness like proposition and would complicate the situation The proposed amendment he regarded as a most dangerous financial proposition

Mr Cockrell ridiculed the objections made by Mr Sherman, whom he spoke of as a great friend and patron of National Banks and as a great gold monometallist Why, he asked should National Banks be allowed to increase circulation by $10,000,000 on their bonds now deposited, while the government itself could not issue greenbacks to redeem the 2 per cent bonds Many questions were asked Mr Cockrell and the bill and amendment went over till to-morrow

Mr Berry, Democrat, of Arkansas addressed the Senate in favor of a double standard of gold and silver

The Lodge resolution was taken up with the Gallinger amendment to it to the effect that it would be unwise and inexpedient to make any radical change in the tariff prior to March 1897 Mr Gallinger addressed the Senate He declared himself ready to vote for the repeal of the Sherman act though he did not believe that the South abused law was largely responsible for existing financial evils He believed that silver and the Sherman act had infinitely less to do with the business depression to-day than the anticipated onslaught of the party in power on the McKinley tariff bill His amendment would put off tariff legislation until 1897, when the Republican party would be again in power

After executive session the Senate adjourned until to-morrow

House

After adopting a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information respecting the silver purchases the debate on the Wilson bill was resumed, Mr McCall, Republican of Massachusetts, speaking for the bill

In the silver debate to-day Mr Bryan (Dem.) of Nebraska, stated his opposition to a single standard of value, be it gold or silver, but favored a double standard He believed that a gold standard would tend to put the prices for our products very low Mr Bryan spoke in favor of the retention of the ratio of 16 to 1 arguing that an increase of the ratio would be detrimental to an international agreement as to the coinage of the two metals. He wanted some bill passed which would make the banks safe places of deposit It was fear of the banks, he said, not of the government, that caused the present stringency As long as there were people here who would chain the country to a single gold standard there would be war here and eternal war (Applause)

At the conclusion of Mr Bryan's speech there were cries of "vote vote"

Mr Henderson of Iowa said that free coinage of silver would drive this country to a silver basis If the Democrats had the courage and patriotism to let the tariff alone they would set the wheels of industry going and would give an impetus to every branch of business But he said he did not believe the farmers and workers were interested in cheap money

Mr Mosea of Georgia spoke against the repeal bill The House then adjourned

War Between the N. Y., N. H. & H. Road and Electric Road.

Hose Company Called Out to Play Upon Crowd.

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Mass, Aug 16 This morning after the Selectmen had given orders to the officials of the N Y, N H & H road to take up the blind track they laid during their fight with the electric road or the town would take it up open hostilities ceased The officials of the electric road and counsel went to Boston to apply for an injunction to restrain the consolidated people from preventing them from laying rails across the crossing at North avenue Gangs of men of the consolidated road were kept a short distance from the crossing ready to block any move of the electric people Superintendent Sanborn had charge of the railroad forces

About one o'clock fully 3,000 people were present when Superintendent Sanborn told Roadmaster Bryant to carry out orders Bryant called the men up and they came with shovels picks axes, crowbars etc and began tearing up as much of the electric road tracks as protected from Railroad avenue to the tracks of the consolidated Road Commissioner Wrigh warned Superintendent Sanborn against touching any paving or tracks on the public highway

As the consolidated men began work the officers attempted to arrest some of the men The Italians rushed in force upon the officers and all their sand hill ovels and pickaxes were used freely The Italians drove the citizens down North avenue The fire alarm was rung and hose 2 turned out and putting two streams on drove the Italians back Rocks flew in every direction and hundreds of dollars worth of plate glass was smashed. Not only those engaged in the battle but several spectators were injured Anson, those knocked down was Superintendent Sanborn In the fight Inspector Bailey and Roadmaster Bryant were arrested and locked up

The Italians got the best of the uproar gized force cut the hose in pieces and broke the hose [illegible] A train was then delayed, Superintendent Sanborn calling off his men A large posse of officers came from Boston on the afternoon train also President Reed of the electric road and Judge Keller with an injunction granted by Judge Barker of the Supreme Court The papers were served on Superintendent Sanborn and he sent them on to the tracks and gave up the fight

President Reed gave Contractor Barnes orders to lay the electric tracks and work day and night The Deputy Sheriff read the riot act to the crowd and most of the mob dispersed after seeing the electric road defeated Officer Hollis served a warrant upon Superintendent Sanborn and locked him up Hollis later bailed out with Bailey and Bryant a director of the electric road going bail It is estimated that the damage to plate glass will be over $5,000 There were no fatalities Enough numb were quite serious hurt, some fatally shot

The trouble is brought about by the differences of opinion between the officers of the New York, New Haven and Hartford and the officers of the Abington and Rockland Electric Road Company The electric road was enjoined by the steam railroad people from crossing at grade but the decision of the Supreme Court was said to be favorable to the electric company and they at once carried out their plans The delay in crossing the tracks at this point makes about six miles of track practically useless

FIVE STRANGERS IN A BOAT

Thought to be Part of a Gang of Safe-Breakers

An organized gang of safe and house breakers is terrorizing the principal towns of Norfolk county Massachusetts and the local police are more than puzzled as to the manner in which the thieves get away with their plunder so adroitly

The gang has been at work since early spring They have operated extensively in Dedham Wellesley and part of Newton Lower Falls Slippers were used on the keys in house locks in every instance and windows were pried open with jimmies In some cases a diamond has been brought into play to cut the glass bet eath window catches thus enabling the burglars to reach and turn the catch Burglary of houses has usually been accompanied by the blowing of safes on the same night

The safe blowers are believed to be a gang of professional thieves and safe breakers connected with McCluskey recently arrested in Boston upon the charge of securing tools for the breaking of safes

A reporter who had been investigating these burglaries has discovered that in the cases of the Wellesley and Newton burglaries—[illegible] one of which a few nights ago, $800 was taken from the house of the President of the Traders Bank—five thieves came down from Wellesley in a hack and landed at Myers [illegible] It was about 3 o'clock in the morning and the gang were five in number for a while after leaving the hack they remained on the shore

This was witnessed by Oliver Smith, of Dedham and Joseph Houghton, of the same place The spot where the men rested is in Dover just across the Dedham line Smith and Houghton were out after pickerel and purposed to follow down the river's course and they started toward the river bank They had a luncheon, and decided to partake of it meantime watching for the haul of lay

While thus engaged Smith and Houghton heard the boat coming down stream saw it make a landing and the forms of five men approaching There is a cook house on the picnic grounds and this the men approached without observing the presence of the fishermen Two of the five entered the cook house the others remaining near by

The flicker of a dark lantern could be distinguished and old men Smith and Houghton were suspicious of the strangers They did not care to interfere, as it was a case of live against two

After about 20 minutes delay the two men left the cook house and a consultation took place, with the three outside Then they all walked down to the river, chuckling to themselves entered their boat and rowed away

It is believed that these men somewhere about the place concealed what they had stolen from the Newton depot safe and elsewhere that night, and that subsequently one of the gang returned and carried it away.

A PLUCKY BOY

A 12-Year-Old Boy Finds Two Thousand Miles in Search of His Birthplace and Relatives

A Middletown Conn dispatch says Tuesday night there arrived in Higganum a boy only 12 years of age, who had made the entire distance from the interior of Nova Scotia to this town on foot Several years ago John Treadwell sided in this town and his family consisted of a wife and one son Johnnie In the spring of 1887 the father died and left the remaining members of the family in destitute circumstances The widow with her boy then 6 years of age left that year for Central Nebraska where they have since resided

Early last spring the mother died and the boy was left without money or means of subsistence in a land of strangers Then it was that the resourceful Yankee pluck and genuine Yankee grit for soon after the death of his mother he started to visit the 2,000 miles lying between him and his early home in Higganum The story of his long journey must be left to the minds of the readers to picture for them lives suffice it to say that after days of toiling and pain he arrived at his destination last night at 7 o'clock ragged hungry and completely destitute

Twice he was helped on his way by kind hearted brakemen of freight trains but the rest distance covered in that way was but comparatively small fraction of the whole distance traversed by the boy He has two uncles living in Higganum Bradley and Hezekiah Treadwell and both the lad known to them as soon as he reached the town His condition was pitiable in the extreme, being so exhausted that as soon as he realized that his long journey was at an end he swooned completely away

The kind hand of relatives soon made the plucky youngster as comfortable as possible but to-day he is quite ill and it is probable that a matter of weeks will elapse before he will regain his former health and strength and fully recover from his walk of two-thirds of the distance across the United States

The story of his remarkable exploit was soon noised about the town and in a very short time the house of his uncle was surrounded with townspeople all anxious to get a glimpse of the boy who had performed such a feat

Sale of Farm Property

The negotiations for a prominent real estate purchase have been practically completed Mayor Beal has sold two of his farms which are the original Hathaway and Cooper farms, to Mr Sylvester Jordan, of Bar Harbor, taking, in part payment and exchange property in Bar Harbor including the cottage formerly owned by the late Alfred Veazie, and store property on Main street

Mayor Beal has found that his time was greatly occupied in looking after the affairs of the farms which have been very successful and on that account decided to dispose of the two named, which are among the finest in the State They cut 300 tons of hay and in every way are in excellent condition The entire contents of the farms with the exception of the trotting horses and colts are included in the sale. Mayor Beal retains the Eastman farm of about forty acres for his own use

Mr Jordan will at once remove to Bangor and reside upon his newly purchased property He will doubtless continue the successful operations which have been carried on there in years past, as he has had much experience

New Coal Firm

Mr Chase B Lemyit and Mr Arthur A Robinson have entered into co partnership for the purpose of carrying on the coal business and have leased the store houses and wharves in the rear of numbers 65, 68 and 70 Exchange street which they are now having put in thorough condition for their business and will soon put in a full stock of best quality coal for which they hope to receive a fair share of the public patronage Their office will be at No 68 Exchange street next south of the Foggy Uniment Company

A party of six people in a carriage stopped at one of the stores and made a purchase, and when they started again the reins got tangled in some way and the horse turned so short as to overturn the vehicle, which went to pieces something like the "deacon's famous one horse shay." The horse started off with the forward wheels and after the people had extricated themselves from the remainder of the rig the rear wheels parted company with the body. The horse did not run far and none of the occupants of the carriage were seriously injured. Another team was procured from Bangor and the party again started for its destination, which was one of the neighboring ponds for a day's outing.

Married a Peasant Girl.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 14.—According to an entry upon the docket of the Western Police Court, the wife of Professor George Kriehn, assistant instructor in ancient history at the Johns Hopkins University, was picked up on the street by an officer and, upon an examination made by two physicians, found to be insane. Professor Kriehn when told of the docket entry became wild, saying it was he who was about crazy; that his wife merely had a bad case of hysterics. Mrs. Kriehn, who was a Swiss peasant girl, arrived in Baltimore two weeks ago in the steerage of the steamship Stuttgart. She had no money and until she announced herself to be the wife of the young professor no one knew that he was a married man. She showed, however, a marriage certificate, and also sea testifying to the birth of a child. Investigation showed that while studying abroad young Kriehn had quietly married the fascinating but unlearned Swiss peasant girl, and had quietly married her without informing his family or friends here of the step he had taken.

When Mrs. Kriehn landed here Professor Kriehn was with a party of Hopkinians taking in the World's Fair. According to the letters found in her possession, Professor Kriehn wrote to his wife that it was for the best that their marriage should be kept a secret, for if that fact became known he would likely be disinherited by his father. Kriehn's father is a wealthy German who lives in Lexington, Mo. In one of the letters held by the woman the statement is made that Professor Kriehn regretted his marriage with his wife.

CHAPTER IV.

We turn with great reluctance, even for a few moments, from this peaceful home, whose inmates look calmly to the uncertain future, upheld by a "confidence void of offense toward God and man," to a most painful contrast.

A more wretched person can hardly be imagined than Le Barron as with bowed head and folded arms he passed from the store and bent his steps homeward. Ah, what a home awaited him! Well he knew how the tidings he must communicate would be received by his family.

Whichever way he turned despair and misery stared him in the face, and his own conscience rose from its long slumbers, and now a stern accuser set his sins in order before him. It carried him back to his youthful days and traced the beginnings of the dark tempest that now raged so fiercely around him, threatening utter destruction. It whispered of the father, too early lost, whose whole life had exemplified the true principles of integrity he so earnestly urged upon his son, of the tender mother, whose latest breath bade him follow in his father's footsteps and trust in his father's God. Now it recalls the fascinations of the gay young beauty whose heart could only be bought by wealth and foolish splendor, not given in generous love. Then came trooping before his fevered vision the temptations to rash speculations, far overreaching honesty, to which he had yielded, and which, most unfortunately, proved so successful as to place him early among wealthy men and enabled him to secure the long coveted bride.

Ah, how soon did he wake from his enchanting dream of love to find all that his heart had so desired turn to bitter, salted. This sad disappointment in the home he had so fondly pictured and the little satisfaction found in the wealth and high position gained by scarcely honest means recalled his parents' efforts to inculcate true principles, which, had they been adopted, might even then have shielded him from the sorrows, already foreshadowed, in the early period of his middle life. When at last Mr. Newton accepted him as a partner, how firmly did he vow to his conscience never again to indulge in the dangerous experiment of unscrupulous speculation! The strict prohibitions against any such attempts, which were a part of the rules of Mr. Newton's business, helped to confirm him in these wise resolutions. Once secure of the partnership, he most anxiously strove to conceal from Mr. Newton some of the business transactions of his earlier life, well assured if once known his continuance in his present position would be of very short duration.

For years he had stood well with the community. A few whispers of his former "haste to be rich" reached Mr. Newton, but after a strict yet quiet investigation he found no cause to believe the rumors or withdraw his confidence, and the reports gradually died away. Meantime his home was not the bright and refreshing spot his youthful fancy had pictured. Le Barron was not naturally a bad hearted man. His love for his wife had been almost idolatrous. He fancied her perfection, but a few short months dispelled the illusion and for many years he had been the slave of her whims and caprices.

Mrs. Le Barron was early educated to feel that wealth and high social position should be her life's ambition. Her parents were poor, but very proud, and when the rising young merchant, Le Barron, wooed and won their daughter their joy was unbounded.

Whose house so grand? Whose carriage, with its superb horses and liveried outriders, made such daily sensation? Whose parties, that vied with the fete of the old world, were so much the style as their daughter's, Mrs. Le Barron?

Was not this sufficient to satisfy a parent's wildest ambition? Why should they be troubled or dissatisfied if their child's private life was one of strife and peevish complaining—if alienate and ungoverned passion made perpetual discord between the inmates of that elegant mansion?

Such were the parents of Mrs. Le Barron, and such the sentiments they had exhibited and taught her to act upon from her childhood. Truly they had "sown the wind," and the terrible harvest was ripening fast.

Before Mrs. Le Barron's insane extravagance of her husband's wealth melted like frost before the sun. He saw the riches for which he had forsaken his father's God "taking to themselves wings," and the position among his brother merchants, whose foundations he had laid in sand, was already crumbling away and tottering to its fall. Sleepless nights and days of dread were silvering his hair and bowing the tall form that once towered so erect above his fellows. He was a premature old man.

When Mr. Newton went abroad, Le Barron's anxieties were almost too weighty for him to preserve the semblance of self control. It was said Le Barron was confining himself too closely to his business, and Mr. Newton, with his usual unselfishness proposed that he should remain at home and that the invalid should have the advantage of the change. Ah, little could Mr. Newton imagine the shock this kind proposition gave him. The miserable man knew that to leave then would be swift destruction, revealing at once the fearful position of his own affairs.

But still able to preserve an outward calm he courteously declined the proffered relaxation on the plea of great distaste for traveling, and with an earnest assurance that his health was firmer than his appearance indicated he smilingly bade his friend farewell.

Le Barron struggled through the first year of his friend's absence, knowing surely that this absence and the unsuspicious nature of the junior partner alone, saved him from speedy exposure. In this state the grand temptation found him. Goaded to madness he joined hands with the tempter and fell, gaining for himself one more short respite from clamorous creditors by a clever forgery of Mr. Newton's name. And now he goes to tell his fatal story to those whose sins have united to drag him down to irretrievable destruction. Bankrupt! Dishonored! A forger! Fugitive from justice or only shielded by him whom he has pecuniarily ruined, yet bearing in his own heart the punishment of his crimes. How can he endure the terrible meeting with those harsh spirits at home?

Who could willingly follow him as he enters his dwelling and listen to the cruel recriminations, the bitter taunts, with which that heartless woman, wild with rage, assails him, when, with trembling frame and quivering lips, he reveals the misery and shame before them?

Poor Le Barron sank into a chair.

We cannot describe the terror of that scene, and fortunately we would not if we could. It would be like standing by the mouth of the pit. It was the few words of this dreadful scene that Lillian and Rose heard which sent them bewildered and frightened home to their parents.

Poor Le B[illegible] sank into a chair at the first [illegible] of his wife's passion. [illegible] like one in a fear- [illegible] ened.

Obituary.

A Dixmont correspondent writes: George Simpson, the subject of this notice, and who departed this life Friday morning, Aug. 11, was born in the town of Frankfort on the 10th of May, 1811, being the eldest child of the late David and Relief Simpson. At an early age his parents moved to what was then called Height of Land, afterward named Dixmont, it then being an almost unbroken wilderness. The early settlers of those days did rugged work in clearing the land to raise crops to feed, clothe and shelter the large family of children then found in every household, David Simpson's family being no exception to the rule, there being eight sons and one daughter.

With this large family to support and the nearest market Hampden or Frankfort, then some twenty miles away, much of the distance through a dense forest with only a bridle paths marked out by spots hewn upon the trees, made it necessary for George to do a great amount of hard labor not only upon the farm, but also to endure many fatiguing rides upon horseback to the nearest market to bring the necessaries of life for his father's family.

After arriving at manhood he left the old Simpson homestead, which now with its smooth fields owes much of its present value to his labor, and settled upon the farm where he has always resided until this death. The stranger in passing this farm can not help beholding with wonder the great length of stone wall built by his work, which would have discouraged a man of less determination than George Simpson.

He was a man of good judgment, outspoken in his belief, devoid of all hypocrisy, having opinions of his own which he dared to proclaim and defend when occasion required.

Mr. Simpson was twice married, his first wife being Belinda Miles, deceased, after which he married Cordelia Miles, who died three years ago. His family consisted of nine children, seven sons and two daughters, all of whom, excepting one son, survive him. He was a brother to A. L. Simpson, Esq., Bangor, Hon. F. A. Simpson, Carmel; David Simpson and Mary S. Toothaker, Dixmont.

Mr. Simpson was a great reader and for a man in his eighty-third year maintained his mental faculties to a remarkable degree.

About two years ago he had a sore upon one of his feet and the attending physician decided upon amputation, since which time it has been necessary for him to use crutches, but even this did not prevent his ambitious nature from engaging in work, for it was only a few days before his death he worked in his garden. The immediate cause of his death was blood poisoning from a slight sore on one of his hands. His funeral took place at Union church, Saturday afternoon, Rev. Henry McLaughlin, clergyman, the funeral being under the direction of Ira M. Smith.

Dixmont News.

Our correspondent writes: At the July term of the Probate court, W. H. Toothaker was appointed by Judge Barrows administrator of the estate of the late George F. Palmer.

A week before last C. W. Page, Esq., who owns and operates the cheese factory at Simpson's Corner, left his horses standing at the factory, when they suddenly started for home at a lively gait, leaving parts of the wagon along the way and, when finally captured it was found that one of them, a very valuable animal, was seriously injured, from which injury he died a few days later.

Grasshoppers are very numerous and are doing much damage to farm crops. In some localities they are feasting upon the leaves of trees in the orchards, many of the smaller trees being entirely stripped of their foliage.

S. A. Davis has taken his horse, Abel J., and two years old filly to, Pittsfield, where he will use Union Park to fit them for the fall fairs and races.

In the Knowlton will case, which has been by the widow contested in the Probate court, a compromise has been effected. L. P. Toothaker, Esq., drew the will, in which A. J. Knowlton was named executor and guardian of the minor child, which by the terms of the will and an existing life insurance policy is to come into possession of some $3,200, which would be under the control of the guardian, hence the objection of the mother to the guardian named in the will. In the final arrangement the will is allowed with A. J. Knowlton, executor, and W. H. Toothaker, guardian of the child.

Charles Hayward, who attended the circus in Newport, last week, was the unfortunate loser of a pocket book containing some twenty dollars.

W. C. Ray, who makes a specialty of early garden truck, was among the first in market this year, his sweet corn being ready for market on the last day of July, which brought a fancy price.

Mrs. Adeste Belchamp, of Great Falls, N.H., is visiting her father, George M. Stevenson.

Miss Nellie Holton, who resides in Jersey City, N.J., together with her three children has taken board for the summer with N. M. Simpson.

Mrs. F. W. Quimby, of Amesbury, Mass., and Mrs. S. S. Varney, of Kingston, are visiting at C. A. Twitchell's.

S. E. Harris and wife spent the Sabbath at Northport campground.

L. P. Toothaker, is making extensive repairs upon his farm buildings.

L. I. Bickford attended the races at Dover, Wednesday and Thursday, where he had his horse, Dick West, entered.
